Lieutenant Matt Daeumer of the La Porte Police Department recently graduated from the Leadership Command College of the Law Enforcement Management Institute of Texas. The three-module, 10-week program is taught by an association of universities throughout Texas and provides law enforcement administrators and executives with the skills necessary to effectively manage police agencies and deliver a high level of service to their various communities.

The Leadership Command College's first module focuses on the topic of leadership and is taught at the Center for Executive Development at Texas A&M University. The second module, presented at Texas Woman's University, focuses on the political, legal and social environment of law enforcement. The program then concludes with training in law enforcement administration during the third module, which is held at Sam Houston State University. Top national and international law enforcement experts teach each of the three-week modules. Topics include leadership, professional ethics and integrity, communication and personnel management issues. The Command College curriculum also aims to keep participants on top of contemporary issues in criminal justice.

This program is one of many offered by the Bill Blackwood Law Enforcement Management Institute of Texas, headquartered on the campus of Sam Houston State University in Huntsville. The Institute, known as "LEMIT," has been training law enforcement managers and executives since its inception in 1987.
